Download Pro: If you have a heavy rolling out of bed in the morning, alarms can help you get up and shine. This top rated clock app for Android and iOS has the distinction of being the most annoying alarm app in the world. What makes Alarms different (and so annoying) is that you are required to perform different tasks before you can turn off the alarm. For example, you can turn off an alarm by shaking it, solving a math problem, or attaching a photo of a registered location in your home. While it's not an alarm for everyone, it can be useful for people who get hit by a snooze button longer than they do Download Pro: Would you like to better understand sleep cycles and wake up refreshed? Sleep Cycle is an intelligent, beautifully designed app that gently wakes you up and provides a detailed analysis of your nighttime habits. Preliminary research gave me two methods:1) Digital clock with 555 timer circuit in this setting, 555 timer circuit is used to translate the signal into speaker alarm / piezo disk into relay. When the clock goes out, the relay electrical equipment that runs through the relay has power.2) Analog clock with transistor amplifierIn this version, it seems that the analog clock only has a direct dc output to the alarm. The transistor is used to amplify the DC system to drive the fire bell engine. Which one would be easier to implement? The device I should be using escaped from the 3VDC, so I was going to run the power lines through the relay or through the transformer. The best alarm clock is the one that wakes you up, right? If that's the case, how do you choose the best alarm clocks from the worst? Whether you're using your smartphone to wake you up or prefer a specific brand and model with multiple alarms and subtle wake-up features, this week we'll take a look at the top five alarms available based on your nominations. Earlier in the week, we asked you which alarm clocks you thought were the best and which ones you used when it was time to get up from a night's sleep or nap. You gave us some really killer nominations this week-so more than we could feature, even though we were rooting for some outsiders. Still, here's your five. Our alarm clocks are an important part of our day, and whether you use anything makes enough noise Read moreThe poll is closed and the votes count! To find out which of the contenders took first place, head over to our weekly hive five follow-up post to see and discuss the winner! If you are looking for an alarm clock, there are hundreds of models and types to choose from, but... Open hardware that was customizable, multiple models and tons of widgets and apps running on it - it was amazing. Chumby no longer manufactures hardware, but Chumby software lives in a number of Sony Dash alarm clocks connected to the Internet, themselves are great alarm clocks that show you the weather, news, time and other useful information when you wake up. Both Chumby and Sony Dash can wake you up to streaming music from the Internet, your own songs, radio and more. Both devices are unfortunately on their way out, but you can still find Chumby and Sony Dash products in many places. If you love Chumby and can't find a device for it, check out Chumby for Android.Philips Wake-Up Light If you don't have the pleasure of waking up to the light on your face every morning – or knowing how pleasant it can be to wake up with a slowly rising light instead of a roaring alarm, philips wake-up light is for you. It will set you back about $99, but you get a combination of light and sound to wake you up in the morning, with the light slowly turning brightness over the minutes around your wake-up time so you can't ignore it. The idea is that light will help you wake up more naturally and gently. The clock also has two optional sound scenes to help you wake up gently, and is even recommended by the National Foundation. Plus, when you don't need it as an alarm clock, you can use it as a normal night lamp.iHomeiHome makes dots, night alarms and library speaker systems for various products including iPhone, iPad, iPod Touch and even Android and Kindle Fire phones. If you have one of these devices, enjoy using it from bed, but you don't want to let the wrong battery drain overnight, iHome has a peripheral for you - wired or wireless - for you. Although iHome is the most popular for its iPhone dots and alarm clocks, which many of your praised for their compatibility (although I imagine iPhone 5 users with iHome may not be too happy right now, but since I mentioned that one of you pointed out that iHome and old iOS devices make the perfect pair for streaming music without your buzzing, tweet phone next to bed) and availability. In addition, many iHome docs have apps that you can install on your device for even more features. Sony Dream MachinesSony's Dream Machines refer to a number of the company's traditional, old school digital alarm clocks, you plug into the wall, set an alarm on the LCD screen, and flip over and go to sleep, knowing that it wakes you up to either a beep alarm, your favorite radio station, or in some models, your favorite CDs. Dream Machines are still widely available in fact, and range from $20 for simple AM/FM models to super-expensive multi-hundred dollar night vision models with screens designed to be readable at night, but don't wake you up. There's a Dream Machine in virtually every shape and size you might need, and many of you probably got your first a long time ago, maybe even before your first smartphone. Photo Ged Carroll.Your smartphoneMany of you pointed out that you have long avoided traditional alarm clocks in favor of your smartphone. Whether it's iOS or Android, there are so many great and diverse sleep monitoring apps and alarm clocks that wake you up to soothing sounds, specific playlists, podcasts or more that there's no reason to use anything else. Plus, it's probably already on the nightstand charging, and you reach for it to check email and social networks when you wake up anyway—it's a natural fit, right? Photo by Digitipedia.Now that you've seen the top five, it's time to put them up for an all-out vote to determine the winner. This week's honorable mention comes out on GE Radio clocks of all shapes and sizes—they were almost as popular as Sony Dream Machines, and I think we speak for many of us who remember getting those old wood-paneled, GE alarm clocks with red numbers and a huge snooze button on top (and an A/B alarm system) when we were younger. It works, it works well, and many of you noted that is all you need. Another honorable mention this week comes out to Neverlate Executive from American Innovative, which many of you praised for offering different alarms for every day of the week that are completely customizable so you can wake up Monday on NPR and Tuesday at your favorite music station, then on something else on Wednesday if you decide to do it all at different times if you have to. You can even customize the snooze time, connect a smartphone or mp3 player and more to it. I own Neverlate Executive and it's a fantastic alarm clock. We got a lot of great nominees this week -- a lot more than we could have, even if we wanted to. Do you have anything to say about one of the candidates? Want to make a case for your personal favorites even if it wasn't included in the list? Remember that the top five are based on your favorite nominations from the candidate challenge thread from earlier in the week. Make your case for your favorite - or alternative - in the discussions below. Hive Five is based on reader nominations. As with most Hive Five posts, if your favorite was omitted, it's not because we hate it - it's because he didn't get the nominations required in the challenge for the post contender to make it into the top five. We understand it's a bit of a popularity contest, but if you have favorites, we want to hear about it. Do you have a proposal for hive five?
